

MICHAEL BECKER is an award-winning filmmaker with over twenty-five years of experience in the entertainment industry. He began working in film when he was sixteen years old in his hometown of Santa Fe, New Mexico. After relocating to Hollywood, Michael quickly rose through the ranks to become a first assistant director at the age of nineteen. In 1995, Michael wrote, produced and directed the feature film, “Cityscrapes” (starring Adam Scott, Ione Skye and Timothy Leary), which played in international film festivals and aired on The Sundance Channel. In 1997, Michael moved to Berlin, supervising commercial shoots throughout Europe till he returned to Los Angeles in 2000. For the next ten years, Michael was mostly involved in television, producing programs for The Discovery Channel, Sci-Fi Channel and Planet Green, including Leonardo DiCaprio’s documentary series, “Greensburg.” After spending a quarter century working in features, commercials and reality television, Michael returned to Santa Fe to pursue his true passion, independent film (and Frisbee golf).
